Guest Speaker: David welcomed Dr Peter Hobbins, 'Head of Knowledge' at Australian National Maritime Museum. His subject was the crash of a Bell 47 G helicopter over Circular Quay on December 10, 1966, revealing how it happened and the 8 years of Court action that followed.

Experienced pilot Jim Reilly undertook an ABC Charter flight (helicopter leased from Rotor-Work) with filming crew Patricia Ludford and Frank Parnell to film Sydney Harbour and the Opera House under construction. As the Bell 47 G circled slowly at about 1000ft above the Quay, and as witnesses watched, they heard a huge bang, a roaring engine, and then watched horrified as pieces of the aircraft fell into the harbour as it spun out of control finally landing behind Goldfields House and disappeared. Commonwealth Film Unit Cameraman, Mike Franklin, watching from Farm Cove captured 15 seconds of the scene whilst Cameraman Frank Parnell, inside the Chopper kept his camera rolling. The 3 on board were killed but remarkably there was no fire or bystanders injured.

Film from both Parnell and Franklin was shown by the popular, Ross Symonds, and then around the world, whilst our Air Safety Investigation Branch, determined that a blade bolt head had sheared off, the rotor blade then fell taking the tail rotor assembly with it.

Then started the blame game with designer engineers, manufacturers, owners, pilot and pilot error, weight safety scrutineers engaged in various Court actions over the next 8 years. Finally, after more incidents around the world, the Bell tail rotor-blade retention nut a $4.75 part, was re-engineered, but it was Rotor-Work who was directed to pay all damages.
